

A look we like

No21: PJ Harvey dares you to spill

What's going on? a) PJ Harvey is back and is fantastic and we love her; b) she's wearing what looks like a wedding dress from the future, but a future where Victoriana was very much on trend; c) she did it at the NME Awards, a place where one is guaranteed to be a victim of extreme spillage. If not beer, then definitely vomit.

Who's doing it? Only one of the most important spiky folk artists of our time, pfff.

Why does it work? In her bridal-esque gown by Ann Demeulemeester, soaring feather headdress and big black boots, Peej corners the market when it comes to relegance. That's rock elegance, to you.

Should you try this at home? At the pub, at a gig, at Lidl, at your wedding, at your sister's wedding, on a long walk on the moors, at a seminar about tooth whitening, at a PTA meeting, at your nana's old-age home, for lunch in the canteen, and yes, at home, too. ■

The lust list

Five things we fancy this week

Pretty beads

Using vintage pieces and lots of imagination, Weiner creates beautiful new jewellery. Go to katieweiner.com for details

Starry legs

The new House of Holland tights collection is out now! Choose between starred knees or fringed hold-ups. From £12, mytights.com

Asos does vintage

Asos's wonderful new Salon collection features shapes from the 1920s through to the 60s. From £28, asos.com

Scented nails

Revlon's new range of varnishes is perfumed. Sweet. From 16 March, £6.49, Superdrug

Fashion fingers

In addition to Karl and the two-headed Viktor & Rolf, wear Gaga on your swearing finger. £9.99 each, rubbishmagshop.com

Crush of the week

Javier Bardem and Penélope Cruz

At every red carpet event, this couple radiates sex. Even their teeth look satisfied. Apart, they were cool; together they're blisteringly hot.

ON THE WEB

Visit guardian.co.uk/lifeandstyle/fashion for more sartorial advice